Workforce Development Standards

The UK’s school food workforce is bigger than the Royal Navy, with more than 80,000 people involved in providing school meals for 4.8 million children a day. When the workforce standards were launched at The School Food People’s Main Event in Birmingham, this workforce can now be considered to be a leader in public sector catering and the most professional in the catering industry as a whole. The changes of the school food industry will have ramifications for schools and children across the country.

The last few years have seen monumental change in the school food industry, including new nutritional standards and all infants in England receiving a free school meal (which is seeing over one million more fed a year), one aspect of these changes has been to the school food workforce. The industry has been professionalised to the highest standard, the image of a school ‘dinner lady’ serving portions of chips followed by chocolate custard are long gone. Caterers in the Education sphere are amongst the most professional and talented cooks in the industry, this is evidenced each year by the consistently high standards in The School Food People’s School Chef of the Year Competition.

The School Catering Workforce Standards clearly define the professional requirements that underpin the delivery of quality school food and help to create a consistent standard for the industry. They say exactly what employers agree are the ‘knowledge’, ‘skills’ and ‘behaviours’ that an individual needs to achieve the best industry standard of performance in their job role. They are a way for all front and back of house catering staff to see how they are doing in relation to what they know can be achieved.

By supporting schools and catering providers to develop a committed and skills workforce, the Workforce Standards will help to engage and motivate employees, raise morale and improve the profile and image of the school food sector. They are purposefully designed to sit along, but not replace, in-house training, apprenticeships and qualifications.

A professional standard for a midday supervisor

A midday supervisor is key to ensuring the pupils during a lunch service are in the right place at the right time, are fed in a friendly and safe environment and get the best out of their breaks. Midday supervisors are often engaged in a variety of roles within the school outside of the lunch break and can provide an excellent link between the catering team and wider school. In the dining room they ensure the friendly, effective and efficient service of lunch and outside of the dining area may control games areas, playgrounds or other activities.

The midday supervisor may rotate around these different tasks over each lunch service, or on a daily or weekly basis. They provide the structure for the lunch break and food service and building a good rapport with the catering team, pupils and teaching staff is essential to a great operation. Usually employed directly by the school, the midday supervisor will bring the culture desired by the senior team into the dining room and can make the lunch experience enjoyable and structured, enabling play time, facilitating food service, and building social skills of the pupils.

The structure of the standard

The table included in this document contains a professional standard that employers have agreed is a professional level of competence for the role of a midday supervisor in a school catering operation.

A professional standard for an assistant cook

An assistant cook works as part of the kitchen team, usually in larger schools and provides support to the cook and / or head of kitchen with preparation, cooking and service, as well as wider kitchen duties. The assistant cook needs to have a wide range of knowledge and skills for food types, cooking methods and dish composition. In some kitchens, kitchen assistants may also take on some of the responsibilities of the assistant cook, and many core competencies, e.g. Food Safety, run parallel across the standards. Often larger operations will have more assistant cooks, who may also deputise for the school cook when necessary. Correct completion of kitchen documentation is important to ensure legal requirements are being satisfied. The catering team will work to set standards laid out in the client's / school's food policy to meet the healthy eating and wellbeing requirements.

A professional standard for a cook

A cook works with the head of kitchen and kitchen team to prepare, cook and serve meals, snacks and other requirements. They provide support to the head of kitchen and bring the plans and recipes to fruition. The cook ensures the kitchen team work to the head of kitchen's specification to deliver the quality and content required to satisfy the customer and governance requirements. In a larger operation school cooks may be supported by either assistant cooks, catering/kitchen assistants or a combination of both. The core preparation and cooking competencies remain the same, but more responsibility will be given for training, stock and ordering, depending on the organisation. Although focussing on a school environment the knowledge, skills and behaviours will match closely with a cook in other industry sectors.

A professional standard for a head of kitchen

Head of kitchen is a collective name for a range of job titles, for individuals that manage the efficient and effective running of a school catering operation to deliver a quality food service in education. Depending on the organisation, examples of these could include catering manager, chef manager, caterer, head chef or catering supervisor all of which relate to similar job roles in the wider catering industry. Running a team of cooks and kitchen / catering assistants, the manager needs to adhere to legislation and organisational guidelines, policies and procedures as well as client specifications and budgets. Meeting Ofsted inspection requirements is also key to the role requiring these managers to work closely with the school leadership team to ensure a whole school approach. Nutrition, portion control and quality are all essential to achieve an effective food production operation and subsequently happy customers. The role may involve running an operation with prescribed menus, or could include the responsibility for menu design. This standard has been developed as part of the School Food Plan, the details of which the head of kitchen should be familiar with. The head of kitchen must also be aware of the requirements of the food based standards and guidance and other relevant legislation and guidance specific to school catering.
